NHS staff cycling for 1000 Lives Plus

At 9am on Thursday 10th September four intrepid cyclists will be setting out from the main entrance at Wrexham Maelor Hospital on a round-Wales cycling marathon that will link up the country's major hospital sites. 'The Improvement Cycle' is being done to promote the 1000 Lives Plus programme to improve patient safety and to raise money for charity.

Riders Mike Fealey, Chris Hancock, Paul Schanzer and Mark Thomas are all involved in 1000 Lives Plus, the five year programme to improve patient safety and reduce avoidable harm across NHS Wales.

On their round-Wales cycling marathon, they will visit 19 NHS hospitals in total in all four corners of Wales, including Bangor, Haverfordwest, Wrexham and Newport, in just eight days.

Every hospital they visit is involved in 1000 Lives Plus. The cyclists will meet the teams who are committed to improving the quality of healthcare in each location.

Each cyclist is also being sponsored to raise funds for worthy causes. Chris Hancock, one of the cycling team explains the aims of the bike ride:

"NHS staff save lives every day. 1000 Lives Plus will enable them to save even more. There is so much good work taking place by staff who are keen to see the care they offer patients improve. This is a good way of raising the profile about what is happening around Wales."

In Wrexham the 1000 Lives+ Team will be setting up a display in the Hospital's main entrance to promote the work of the campaign to staff, patients and visitors. Sarah Lawrence, the Project Support Officer said: "Staff across the Betsi Cadwaladr Health Board are committed to providing the best care possible for our patients. Glan Clwyd and Wrexham Maelor Hospitals were among the hospitals in the UK selected to lead the way in the Safer Patient Initiative. We are delighted that we have been able to extend that work through 1000 Lives and now 1000 Lives Plus, and in so doing to improve the quality of the service that patients experience."

1000 Lives Plus Director, Dr Alan Willson, said "It is really encouraging to hear how staff across Wales are committed to providing the best healthcare possible. This is a great way to raise everyone's awareness of the excellent efforts to improve healthcare still further."
